If you have ever been around developers, you know that the vast majority of them like to opt for darker versions of the traditional themes, whenever possible. Why? Because exposing yourself to a screen for hours, day-by-day, will affect your sight. More and more professions and tasks are now moving towards the digital environment. As a regular Grammarly user, it is imperative for you to protect your eyes. Same as a developer, you are probably spending hours attentively looking at the screen. In normal mode, all-white screens have a strong blue light balance. This can cause considerable damage to your eyes, especially for long-time exposure; and, not to mention, looking at white screens for too long is super tiring as well. Go Grammarly Dark If you are not yet convinced you need Grammarly Dark, no worries. Like all good things, they must be tested. Install the add-on, open Grammarly, and do your tasks. After a couple
