While people often have a hard time passing up a free sample or two, sometimes a whole case is offered up without even the slightest haggle from the shop—that’s how it was for us when we visited A.C. Moore last month. A.C. Moore is one of those big-box stores that has managed to survive a long while despite the endless lines at traditional big-box retailers. The furniture, electronics, household appliances, building materials, home décor, and hardware departments are all part of the same store, and A.C. Moore has been around for many years now. The big problem they have is that they don’t have much of a website or online presence. We were excited to learn that this store has been manufacturing their own line of lockers for several years, so we headed to the Home & Hardware show last month to see what’s new. Unlike most companies that provide other manufacturers with manufactured lockers, A.C. Moore does it all themselves. They manufacture their own locks, hinges, cabinet-making kits, hinges, cartons, and plenty more—they’ve got it all. The quality of their products is good and the prices are right, and the folks at A.C. Moore seem to be genuinely interested in customer satisfaction. Turns out, locking on is a new product that the company is proud to be making in the near future. The locking on options include the choice of having an acrylic or galvanized handle for each locker. Then there is the choice of having your locker have a front or back door or both doors. If
