Game of the week- "No Time to Live". Play it now. Long-term disability after fetal abnormality. To evaluate the long-term outcome of pregnancy in patients with fetal abnormalities and identify factors that may predict outcome. Patients with fetal abnormality who delivered between 1999 and 2009 at the John Radcliffe and University Hospitals NHS Trust were identified. For each delivered baby a demographic and clinical information record was retrospectively reviewed. The pregnancies were divided into two groups; those with a good outcome and those with a poor outcome. Information on the incidence of perinatal death, stillbirth, neonatal death, neonatal morbidity and long-term disability was recorded. Kaplan-Meier survival curves and Cox regression models were used to identify factors associated with long-term disability. Seventy-four patients had a fetal abnormality of whom 21 (28%) had a good outcome. The difference in survival to discharge in the good outcome and poor outcome groups was significant (P=0.01). Forty-eight pregnancies had a poor outcome and 33 (69%) of these ended in perinatal death. Severe neurological abnormalities at birth were associated with poor outcome independent of the underlying cause of the fetal abnormality (P=0.03). The overall incidence of perinatal death in the group with a poor outcome was 31%. Patients with two or more major fetal anomalies, including multiple pterygium syndrome, have a poor long-term outcome. These patients should be closely monitored and be counselled that the outcome may be poor if the fetus has an additional severe anomaly. United States Court of Appeals
