The two biggest ongoing debates about breast cancer are which causes it, and what is the best way to treat it. Which it is and how to treat it have been discussed in both the public and medical literature for quite a while. The three major areas of debate have been: 1. Chemotherapy 2. Surgery 3. Targeted Therapy The current view is that chemotherapy is necessary and effective in treatment of breast cancer. There is a fairly strong correlation between early stage breast cancer and improved disease-free survival rates. Surgical treatment of breast cancer is also becoming less important as more conservative therapies are used to treat the cancer. Surgery is used to remove the primary tumor, examine the lymph nodes, and stage the cancer. Targeted therapy involves using chemotherapy drugs to fight cancer cells that are identified by the tumor by examining the molecular signatures of the cancer cells. The bottom line of this is that both chemotherapy and surgery are important and effective treatments for breast cancer. The best treatment decision should be based upon an individualized assessment of the risk of recurrence and also the risk of the side effects of the treatments. Breast Reconstruction If you have had a breast removed as the result of breast cancer, you can have a breast reconstruction to restore the appearance and shape of your breast. Breast reconstruction can be done through the use of implants, which are made of plastic, or through other methods. How to find a Breast Reconstruction Specialist Some methods are only used if you have a big sized prosthesis, such as the use of implants. Some methods can be used to improve your appearance regardless of prosthesis size. If you need to choose between implants or other methods, choose implants. If you are happy with the appearance of your implants, you should not have them removed or replaced. However, if you do have your implants removed, you may choose to have a breast reconstruction with the use of other methods. Newly formed breast tissue is mostly similar to skin, so in order to achieve a good cosmetic result, it is best to choose skin-based reconstruction methods. These methods are cheaper than implants, but
