Hi Mariette, you are correct, pdf and html is not a good format to use in practice. The problem has to do with the uniformization of the look-and-feel of the published documents. In pdf documents, it is largely possible to achieve a seamless look-and-feel, while this would be impossible for html, which is page-oriented. In summary, the PDF format offers more freedom to the design, while the HTML offers greater control over the look-and-feel. Which format

I am trying to use reflection to access a method. I have a class like this: public class A{ public void Method1(){ } public void Method2(){ } } Then I need to select it like this: A myAObject = new A(); Action[] actions = new Action[2]; actions[0] = myAObject.Method1; actions[1] = myAObject.Method2; In this action[] there are two methods. I would like to use reflection to define a selector which will select only one from the array and invoke it.
